Cleveland Metropolitan School District updates plans for school construction

The Cleveland Metropolitan School District (CMSD) held a series of open houses, over the past month, to gather community input on its updated construction plan for Issue 4 funds passed by voters this past November. The school district anticipates the bond issue will raise $200 million and the state of Ohio has promised to match those funds on a $2 to $1 basis for new construction that meets state's criterion. The CMSD says it plans to replace 22 schools with new buildings over the next four years and plans to remodel 20-23 schools over the next four or 5 years.

CMSD Chief Operating Officer Patrick Zohn says the plan to upgrade the Cleveland schools, which began in 2001, has already built 34 new schools and substantially rehabbed seven schools with a total of 23,000 new seats for students. The state projects that the CMSD's student population in 2019 will be 32,500 students. Zohn says the state will agree to match funding for new or substantially rehabbed schools for 9,500 more students. Zohn says that 2,500 of those seats are projected for high school students and 7,000 for elementary school students.

Zohn stressed the importance of getting the construction of new schools started by 2019 so the current population projections will be used and the district won't lose more seats due to possible lower population projections.

Clark Fulton & Stockyard Neighborhoods

One of the Open Houses, on March 5th at Clark School focused on the Construction Plan for the Clark Fulton and Stockyard neighborhoods.

CMSD Chief Operating Officer Patrick Zohn revealed that plans call for a new H. Barbara Booker School (now between W. 65 and W. 67th just South of Lorain Avenue) to be built on the current site of Halle School (between W. 73rd and W. 82nd – South of Clark Avenue). The new

Women Speak Out for Peace and Justice honors two women for their commitment to human rights

On March 14th Women Speak Out for Peace and Justice celebrated the 100th Anniversary of the founding of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom at Kan Zaman Restaurant at W. 25th and Franklin Blvd. The celebration honored two women, Norma Freeman and Bea Silverberg, with the lone Biggs Human Rights Award. The Kan Zaman Restaurant proved to be a fitting location for the ceremony as Norma Freeman and Bea Silverberg both chose to share a bit of the story of their lives and their efforts in the struggle for justice. The interior of the restaurant is shaped like a Bedouin tent and its name, in Arabic, means "Once Upon a Time" – the beginning phrase for storytellers.

Following an introduction by a Woman Speak Out member that described Norma Freeman as born in Cleveland, a graduate of John Adams High School and Fisk University. Freeman is a resident of the Glenville neighborhood for the past 50 years, married with three boys. Freeman is co-editor with her husband Don of the magazine Vibration. She served as a health educator in Cleveland and was the first African American teacher at the Cleveland Health Museum. Norma was also involved in teaching and mentoring children at League Park Center where her husband, Don served as Director. Norma and her husband Don have been steady advocates for Cleveland's children at school board meetings and in educational reform groups for decades – and have continued that advocacy long after their own children graduated from the Cleveland Municipal School District. # Detroit Shoreway residents vote to remove landmark status from historic Watterson Lake School building to make way for demolition

by Chuck Hoven

At a March 18th Community meeting held in Bethany Presbyterian Church, residents voted 22 to 3 to have historic Watterson Lake School Building on W. 74th and Detroit Avenue removed from its landmark status and demolished. The school, built in 1906 and designed by architect Frank S. Barnum, has been vacant since the 1980s. Students currently attend a newer Watterson Lake built in 1969 next to the old building. After the vote, Ward 15 Councilman Matt Zone said he would immediately work to get on the agenda of the Landmarks Commission to pursue removing landmark status of the building so it can be demolished this summer.

In the discussion prior to the vote, Councilman Zone noted the meetings held over the years to attempt to save the building. He recalled attending a meeting in 1995 where restoration of the building was an issue. He said Detroit Shoreway Community Development Organization presented the school district an analysis of the building in 1988.

Resident Sharon Dossa, who attended school in the old Watterson Lake building, recalled the schools' former principal working to save the historic structure. Dossa said something of the school could have been saved years ago when the school was "not as visibly terrible as it is now." She said what happened to Watterson Lake was "demolition by neglect by the Cleveland Metropolitan School District."

Residents attending the meeting were given a list of the recent meetings of the West Clinton Block Club where residents sought answers from the school district about the condition of the building. In response to these efforts the school district produced a number of reports.

An October 2013 Sebesta & Associates airborne asbestos report "showed significant potential for exposure to airborne asbestos fibers and fungal spores in the 1906 building."

An April 2014 Masonry Prism Testing for Compressive Strength recommended demolition rather than trying to save the 1906 walls.

Councilman Zone said he also asked local developer Marous Brothers Construction for an opinion, and in February of this year they told him the building was unlikely to attract an adaptive use developer. He said other builders and an architect with expertise in historic preservation have given him similar feedback.

Councilman Zone said the Cleveland Metropolitan School District has agreed to cover the cost of demolishing the structure. Zone said the entire cost of the demolition would have to come from district funds – the state will not match the cost because there are currently no students in the building. A November 2013 Barber & Hoffman cost estimate determined the cost of demolition to be between $400,000 and $500,000. An additional $250,000-$300,000 would be added to the cost to brace and preserve the façade. It was also noted some of the terra cotta work in the design of the façade fell off in 2013.

With Watterson Lake's 1969 building eventually slated to be closed by the school district after a new Waverly-Watterson Lake building is constructed on the current site of Waverly, Councilman Zone said a decision had to be made whether the old building should be torn down this summer during school recess or to wait and tear both buildings down at the same time.

Councilman Zone said the school district had agreed to see if it could separate the parcels and tear down just the old building and prepare the site for potential development. He said that demolishing the school now would allow the option of keeping some of the artifacts for incorporation into the new school planned for the Waverly site on W. 57th and allow for a small development site on Detroit Avenue. Councilman Zone assured residents that every precaution would be taken in demolishing the building to assure air quality safety in the nearby neighborhood.

After years of neglect, a report on the poor condition of the building's masonry convinced most of those attending the meeting that saving the structure was no longer feasible.

herself in the struggle for racial justice and is currently involved in several groups seeking justice following the death of unarmed civilians due to police violence. Norma Freeman thanked Women Speak Out for the lone Biggs Human Rights Award saying that the award was especially meaningful because she knew lone Biggs and considered her a mentor. Freeman then began to relate her story – choosing to start at a major turning point in her life that happened in 1957 when as a newly arrived 17 year old student at Fisk University a chance encounter with the schools’ most famous graduate,

W. E. B. Du Bois, changed her life. Freeman remembers seeing W.E.B. Du Bois walking on campus and recognizing him from pictures she had seen. She went up to him and introduced herself. She remembers the 15-minute encounter with Du Bois in which he told her whatever you do in life make sure “you assist our people in their liberation.” Norma said when she and

Don Freeman’s relationship was beginning to get serious, Don told her “Nothing on this planet will stand in the way of me working for the liberation of our people and for all oppressed people.” Norma says that is when she fell in love with Don. She believes that without the encounter with W.E. B. Du Bois she would not have recognized the importance of what Don was saying. Norma said in her life that followed with Don, they consciously chose to stay in Glenville, to send their children to public schools in Cleveland and to embrace the neighborhood children. Norma marveled at the heroic lives people in her community in Cleveland’s Glenville neighborhood live every day. She spoke of the alienation that educated people sometimes feel when they leave the city and warned of the life alienating values of our culture such as materialism, hedonism and egoism. She spoke of the difference between “Me and Mine vs. We and Us.” She urged young people to embrace a philosophy of “We are our brothers’ and sisters’ keepers.” Speaking of the life she and Don live, Norma said, “We chose this path. The road that is least travelled, that is where I want to go.” Again in closing she offered some advise to the young, “Lead the kind of life you choose.” A Women Speak Out member then introduced Bea Silverberg as a writer and historian who believes in peaceful means of settling conflicts. Silverberg was involved in the labor movement in Washington D.C. In 1945 she participated in a United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation mission to Yugoslavia. In 1948 she went on tour with Henry Wallace’s Progressive Party. In 1949 she married Lou Silverberg and moved to Ohio. During the 1950s she became involved in the civil rights and peace movements in Cleveland. She worked as a War on Poverty researcher at Case Western Reserve University. In 1966 she took a position as a social worker for a Head Start program on the Near West Side of Cleveland. In 1974, Silverberg moved to Ashtabula and became involved in the Ashtabula Head Start Program. She was involved in starting a new agency called Home Safe that provided shelter and services for abused women. She also became involved in the Ashtabula Peace Council. In recent years Bea Silverberg has been involved in writing and art. Her books include a children’s book about Jane Addams and in 2009 she had an art show featuring her ceramics work. Bea Silverberg showed her love of history as she began her talk by relating the story of Jane Addams, a subject of one of her books. She said that 100 years ago, when World War I raged in Europe, women in the United States formed the Women’s Peace Party. She said Jane Addams served as the president of the party from 1914-1915. During that period 43 women from the party crossed the Atlantic to meet with 300 European women at The Hague. She said the women went to leaders of countries on both sides of the conflict pleading for peace. Silverberg also talked about her involvement in starting the Ashtabula Peace Council during a time period when people were worried about the world coming to an end due to nuclear war. The Ashtabula Peace Council, organized by four women, targeted a war production plant that was storing depleted uranium rods. They held a meeting in Jefferson, the Ashtabula County Seat, and organized a march of 500 people to the war production plant. At the time Ashtabula County was being sprinkled with radioactivity. The theme of their organizing was “there is no hiding place.” Silverberg said families with baby carriages and dogs in tow joined the protest. She said, stories about the radioactivity poisoning fields, brooks and the atmosphere made headlines. The war production plant closed down. Bea Silverberg said her message was that four women, each doing what they could in their own way, were instrumental in closing a plant that was damaging the community. In closing, Silverberg cited the poetry of Mary Oliver urging those present not to just be visitors to the planet, but to work for peace, freedom and justice for all. She then added, “We should all be feminists.”

Detroit Shoreway Community Development Organization’s Strategic Vision calls for new name and expanded focus

by Chuck Hoven

In his remarks to those gathered for Detroit Shoreway’s 41st annual meeting, Detroit Shoreway Community Development Organization Board of Directors Chair Joe Tegreene focused on the organization’s new strategic plan. Tegreene told the crowd of over 150 people gathered at Our Lady of Mt Carmel’s Pope John Hall that it was not enough to just celebrate the organizations’ successes, but DSCDO must also look for ways it can improve.

To that end, Tegreene said a Strategic Vision Steering Committee was formed. The group, co-chaired by Joe Tegreene and Paul Ettorre re-examined the organization’s charter and mission, and working with Strategy Design Partners looked at number of key focus areas for ways to improve the organization. The key areas looked at include: Mission, Values, Place Making, Economic Opportunity, Community Engagement, Governance and Staffing.

The resulting report: Detroit Shoreway Strategic Vision: 2015-2017 was available to those in attendance. Tegreene said information used to form the Strategic Vision was gathered from over 300 people who were directly interviewed, neighborhood focus groups and surveys. The report indicates efforts were made to be inclusive in the planning process and make sure input to the planning process came from “underrepresented and marginalized stakeholders.”

Tegreene celebrated the successes of the Gordon Square Arts District and urged members to attend the Capitol Theatre when going to a movie rather than opting for Crocker Park. While Tegreene called on building on the success of the Gordon Square Arts District, he also responded to criticism that the DSCDO needed to focus more resources on areas outside of the Gordon Square Arts District. He specifically mentioned the area South of Franklin Boulevard where he said the organization needs to work to acquire properties to help assure useful development.

Tegreene also noted perceived safety concerns along the W. 80s and in areas South of Madison and along Lorain Avenue. He called for addressing these concerns and targeting certain areas for additional resources and code enforcement. Emphasizing the organizations’ commitment to diversity and providing housing for a mixed income population of people of all walks of life, Tegreene emphasized the Detroit Shoreway neighborhood has boundaries from Lake Erie to I-90 and from W. 85 to W. 45. He noted the neighborhood is larger than just the Gordon Square Arts District with which it is often identified. He called on the organization not to ignore other sub districts within its boundaries such as the EcoVillage and the Lorain Avenue Antiques District and to do a better job of communicating with block clubs.

In addition to focusing more resources outside of the Gordon Square Arts District, Tegreene said, “we have to solve the name game.” He noted, the name Detroit Shoreway “ignores vital areas South of Franklin.” The Strategic Vision report calls on Detroit Shoreway Community Development Organization members to be prepared to vote on a new name at its next annual meeting.

In the area of Economic Development, Tegreene said a key task was encouraging businesses to locate in the neighborhood. He said with the recent grand opening of Near West Theatre in the Gordon Square Arts District, parking was a serious problem that had to be addressed. He also called on the renewal of the tax for the Special Improvement District Tax that helped to support safety, cleanups and snow removal in the Gordon Square Arts District. Tegreene called for support for major improvements planned for Lorain Avenue – a major business district in their service area.

Tegreene noted the Strategic Plan calls for addressing the educational needs of the area’s population. He called for building a strong foundation for families to move into the neighborhood. He stressed the importance having amenities and services for families with children, not just young professionals and empty nesters. He urged the organization to help link families to high quality educational opportunities. He also noted some services provided by DSCDO to low income families such as help for working families in securing Earned Income Tax Credit and a neighborhood Wellness Fair.

Tegreene said the organization needed to focus on families with children and on the housing needs of seniors that wanted to stay in the neighborhood. He urged the organization to make sure “people of all ages feel welcome and supported.”

The Strategic Plan, said Tegreene, calls for more diversity on the Board of Directors and better business models to focus resources throughout the neighborhood. He also noted the organization’s relationship in overseeing the operations of Stockyard Clark Fulton Brooklyn Centre. He said that measures need to be taken to assure SCFBC is well integrated into the organization and getting the services they deserve.

Following Tegreene’s speech he announced the results of the DSCDO Board of Directors election. Four current board members were re-elected: Paul Ettorre, Maryellen Staab, Dan McCormick and Mike O’Conner. One new member, Patty Jurca, was also elected.

The organization’s annual report indicated income of $2.497 million and expenditures of $2.308 million.

The annual meeting also featured a number of awards acknowledging contributions to the neighborhood.

State Senator Michael Skindell and State Representative Nickie Antonio presented Community Spirit Awards.

SEED LIBRARY AND SEED BANK

the Third Floor of the Louis Stokes Wing at 325 Superior Avenue.

The Seed Library is joint effort of the Cleveland Seed Bank and the Cleveland Public Library. Two Ohio City neighborhood residents, Marilyn McHugh and Chris Kennedy, founded the Cleveland Seed Bank. Their goal is to create a network of local gardeners that save and share their seeds. By doing so they hope to develop a local source for seeds that are well adapted to Cleveland's growing conditions.

Residents wishing to get seeds at the library can take out up to five packets of seeds each month. They simply fill out a card that indicates what seeds packets they are taking.

McHugh and Kennedy hold seed packaging parties where seeds saved from the previous years are neatly packaged and labeled by volunteers. Some of the labels contain information on how best to save seeds from the plants. Those borrowing the seeds are asked to save seeds from the best plant in order to grow them in their garden next year, to lend to a friend, or to participate in a "seed swap." McHugh says they take the seeds they package to the Main Library downtown and they are then sent out to the participating branches through interlibrary mail. She says they try to send the seeds out when it is time for them to be planted.

The Cleveland Seed Bank has an online seed exchange that Kennedy likened to a Craig's List for seeds. Gardeners and urban farmers can go to the site to make arrangements to exchange seeds with others. Thus far the site has over 300 participants exchanging seeds. Kennedy and McHugh hope to recruit another one hundred seed savers to participate in the network this year.

McHugh and Kennedy said that when they first started the Cleveland Seed Bank in 2013, a local group called the Cleveland Gift Camp organized a weekend event where they build websites for nonprofit groups. They participated in an intensive website building weekend and the result is the Cleveland Seed Bank website: www.clevelandseedbank.org. Individuals can sign up on the website to be part of the seed sharing network.

The organization, started by Bill and Alison Ripcho of Ripcho Studio, offers clothing and other donated household items to Cleveland residents in need.

McHugh and Kennedy say the idea for the Seed Bank came from the couple's experience working in India with the Hummingbird Project, a non profit they started that is "dedicated to building regenerative ecological systems and empowering individuals in resource poor locals." In India they were confronted with farmers who had lost their seed supply overnight. They were concerned about the seed supply in Cleveland where they live and created the Cleveland Seed Bank as an initiative of the Hummingbird Project.

One of the concerns is keeping diverse strains of seeds alive as large seed companies have been dominating the seed industry and trying to create a monopoly on seed distribution. Kennedy says instead of getting mad and marching against Monsanto, the seed exchanges provide "an alternative model if you don't like the seed system."

McHugh and Kennedy also hold seed events and give talks to gardeners and other groups. McHugh says the workshops help seed savers to understand the proper isolation distance (separation from other plants to avoid cross-pollination) and population size (number of plants necessary to help ensure plants are not too closely inbred.)

CMSD SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION PLAN UPDATE

Booker is scheduled to open on the Halle School site in August of 2017. Once Booker students have moved out of their current school, that school will be used as a swing site for Clark School students to move into while a new school is being built on the current site of Clark School (5550 Clark Avenue). That new 500-seat Clark School should open in August of 2018. Once the new Clark School is open, the school district's plans call for the current H. Barbara Booker School to be demolished and the site turned into a community green space. On the Eastern end of Clark neighborhood, the district's current plan is to maintain Walton school as is. Future decisions about the school have been put off until 2018-19.

Lincoln West

The greatest amount of discussion occurred around the fate of Lincoln West High School. Zohn said a number of options are on the table for Lincoln West. He promised more meetings before a decision has to be made in eight or nine months. The options include: 1) Demolishing the existing school and building a new school on the site. 2) Demolishing the natatorium and academic wing and renovating the gym wing and partial basement underneath 2A) Demolishing the natatorium and academic wing and renovating the gym wing and a full basement underneath. 3) Demolishing academic wing while renovating the gym wing and partial basement. Only the third option maintains the swimming pool – an expressed desire of the students – especially those on the school's swim team.

At the time of the meeting at Clark School, Zohn said he had just received a 138 page report from an architect that was asked to consider each of the above options in deciding how to best configure the building to serve 950 students. Zohn said he had not yet read the report. Councilman Brian Cummins, in attendance at the Clark School Open House, said one of the issues under discussion concerning Lincoln West was where students could go during construction when the new school is being built. He said discussions also have involved how other schools in the neighborhood – Walton Luis Muños Marin and Scranton may come into play in that discussion. Cummins said he would like to find a solution that allows Lincoln West students to stay in the neighborhood during school construction or renovation.

Other High Schools

Zohn noted the planned opening in August of this year of the new Max Hayes at W. 65th and Walworth and the new John Marshall on W. 140th. The movement of students to these new schools will make space available for other moves by the district. John Marshall students currently at Carl F. Shuler will move into the new John Marshall in August. Plans call for Bard High School Early College Cleveland to vacate the Brooklawn building to move into the Shuler building. While the Max Hayes students will move to their new building at W. 65th and Walworth, the New Tech West High School students also in the current Max Hayes will not be going to that location. Instead they will be moving to the Brooklawn building – south of Halloran Park off of W. 117th. The old Max Hayes on Detroit Avenue will be demolished to make way for a new West Side High School, which the district says will be able to accommodate up to 600 students.

Other Schools

In the Detroit Shoreway neighborhood Ward 15 Councilman Matt Zone says the district plans to merge Watterson Lake (W. 74th between Franklin and Detroit) and Waverly (From W. 54th to W. 57, between Bridge and Franklin) into one school to be built on the current site of Waverly. As far as swing space goes, Zone hopes students will be able to stay in the neighborhood and go to Watterson Lake in the 2015-2016 school year, while construction of the new school is underway.

In the Brooklyn Centre neighborhood, Denison School will be torn down to make way for a new school sometime between 2017 and 2019. Students will swing to Charles Mooney during construction. Plans call for Marion C. Seltzer in the Cudell neighborhood to build a new school in 2017-2018 as well. A community planning process will help determine a swing site and plans for the new school. The Tremont Montessori School stakeholders are in discussion as to whether they want to have a new school built on the site, rehab the existing school or some combination of partial rehab and part new building. A number of cases, the CMSD has opted for remodeling rather than building new. Work will begin this summer on Joseph M. Gallagher, Wilbur Wright, Luis Agassiz and Carl F. Shuler on the West Side. In the case of Wilbur Wright, after being rehabbed, the school located in the Westown neighborhood, will add students transitioning from McKinley school which will closed after the transition is complete. Shuler, as mentioned above will be the new home of Bard High School. Editor's Note: For more information visit: www.clevelandmetroschools.org/Page/7079
