Ohio City Incorporated celebrates at annual meeting

At the Ohio City Incorporated (OCI) annual meeting on March 21, both Board President Chris Schmitt and Executive Director Tom McNair called for the organization to improve its connection to people in the community.

Board President Schmitt called for creating an "environment that is welcoming and supportive to families of all types." He said the organization is working to "physically connect" the neighborhood with special attention to Cuyahoga Metropolitan Housing Authority housing. He said OCI believes in inclusion and diversity, but must do a better job of communicating with residents. He urged residents to get to know the staff and board better this year and reach out to them. "We want to be connected to you," he said. He urged residents to reach out to board and staff members with their questions and concerns.

Executive Director Tom McNair talked about the demographics of the neighborhood that is 54% white, 34% African American and 18% Hispanic. He noted that in a neighborhood of 10,000 residents, 2000 of those residents lived in public housing and 80% of the public housing residents are African American. He talked about the challenge to connect the neighborhood better physically, but also to "start talking with each other."

McNair challenged the organization to "evolve from outreach to engagement." He noted while information was available at block club meetings, a lot of people never go to block club meetings. McNair promised to hold quarterly community forums and to form a Community Engagement Committee "to help reach other people we are not reaching."

McNair talked about efforts by OCI to improve the walkability and connectivity of the whole neighborhood, efforts to attract and retain businesses, work to increase housing density along the main transit

by Chuck Hoven

"The West Side Market is one of the most amazing places you are ever going to find," said Ohio City Executive Director Tom McNair at the Ohio City Incorporated annual meeting on March 21, 2017.

Former President of the West Side Market Tenants' Association Vince Bertonaschi said he is concerned some of the characteristics that make the West Side Market so special will be lost because of changes instituted in an effort by Ohio City Inc, to "market the West Side Market" that began around the planning for the West Side Market's centennial celebration in 2012.

When he served as president of the West Side Market Tenants Association, Bertonaschi advocated strongly for his fellow tenants and worked to preserve the West Side Market as a real market where people shop for groceries from small merchants who are involved in the selection and preparation of the product they sell.

After over 30 years at the West Side Market, Bertonaschi decided not to renew his lease this year. It seemed to him that the City of Cleveland was ignoring his pleas on behalf of West Side Market Merchants to lower rent 25% for three years while they regained customers who have changed their shopping habits because they could not find a place to park when they came to the West Side Market.

NEWS ANALYSIS

Bertonaschi objects to recent changes in the West Side Market's hours, the takeover of the West Side Market's parking lot by the City of Cleveland, and the plan to institute paid parking at the West Side Market parking lot.

Bertonaschi fought to maintain the West Side Market Tenants Association control over the West Side Market Parking lot. "I'm tired of fighting something that should not have to be fought," he said. He talked about the history of the West Side Market Parking lot and the role the West Side Market Tenants played in securing property for the lot and maintaining it over the years. Bertonaschi is outraged at the takeover of the lot by the city of Cleveland.

West Side School Fair showcases offerings at fifteen Cleveland high schools

Two hundred people attended a West Side School Fair that showcased fifteen Cleveland high schools to families of sixth, seventh and eighth graders attending public, private and charter schools within the Cleveland Metropolitan School District. The Cleveland Transformation Alliance and Bellaire-Puritas Development Corporation hosted the fair held on March 2nd at John Marshall High School.

While promoting the event, Piet van Lier, executive director of the Transformation Alliance said, "It is a great one-stop-shopping opportunity for Cleveland families and students who are looking for the public high school that best fits their needs. It's also a chance for educators to learn more about the families and communities they serve."

Rachel Napolitano, marketing coordinator and engagement specialist at Bellaire-Puritas Development Corporation, said that of the fifteen high schools that accepted the invitation to this showcase of west side and downtown high schools, five are in the West Park neighborhood and four are on or near the W. 140th Education Corridor.

Transformation Alliance staff member Steve Lake said that of the 200 people in attendance at the fair, eighty-eight were sixth through eighth grade students. He said the 6th through 8th grade students, attending the West Side School Fair, came from 25 different schools.

Educators served as staff at informational tables, and students and educators took part in a panel discussion and dialogue to answer questions about choosing the right high school.

"We're excited to host this event for Cleveland families," said Ian Heisey of Bellaire-Puritas. "We're looking forward to showcasing the quality high school options available in our city."

Those attending the event enjoyed a free dinner, tours of the three John Marshall high schools, giveaways and prizes, and music provided by a DJ. The first 50 families to arrive received free Dave's gift cards.

The event was funded in part by the Martha Holden Jennings Foundation, with additional support from the Cuyahoga Metropolitan Housing Authority. For more information, visit www.SchoolQualityFair.org.

Transformation Alliance staff member Steve Lake reported that efforts to market Cleveland high schools are underway in other neighborhoods as well. Lake said tentative plans call for another high school fair to be held in the Old Brooklyn neighborhood in mid-May; in the Northeast Shores Collinwood neighborhood in mid-June and in the Slavic Village neighborhood in July or August. The Transformation Alliance is also working with neighborhood contacts in hopes of being able to showcase high schools at school fairs in the Glenville and Central neighborhoods as well.

Community Roundtable-- Cleveland Police Reform

To the editor:

There was much to learn from the community roundtable on Cleveland police reform and consent decree held on March 22nd at the Urban Community School in Ohio City. But, it might not have been obvious. That is because people tend to focus on content instead form, "substance" instead of procedure. But, procedure largely determines substance and outcomes, and for that reason is imperative to monitor.

LETTER

In fact, it is good to view public meetings as an anthropologist would see them, that is, as a "ceremony", in this case as a legally mandated ceremony of validation. Especially here, whether it was merely a matter of going through the motions.

Firstly, is the issue of who is invited to the ceremony-- and who is not. That would certainly affect the outcome. I myself learned of the meeting only by chance through a flyer at the library posted inconspicuously on the day of the meeting. How the other eighty some participants were informed, I do not know. But the control of the flow of information is real power, and I couldn't help but noticing that there were less than twenty African Americans present, and this for an issue greatly divided by race. Also interesting, was that to attend the meeting one was required, for some reason, to write down one's name, telephone number and e-mail. But why not also a brief questionnaire on race, age, gender, education level, and income level which is common even to employment applications and marketing surveys? It is important to know how representative these public forums truly are.

Secondly, one should ask who leads the meetings. In this case, some of the roundtable "facilitators" were members of the police department. One African American gentleman commented to me that this, in itself, would have a chilling effect on free discussion, especially since the topic was the consent decree and police misconduct.

I was disappointed that the copy of the "Settlement Agreement" we were given was only two partial pages of a document that literally covered hundreds of points. And more importantly, the agreement's case number was absent from its place on the form, and the judge's name was absent from its place of the form. There was no internet link given. Again, the control of information controls outcomes.

Finally, and this might seem like a small point, but is actually a "merely

"Let me in immigration man"

To the editor:

My grandfather Albert Joseph Bialek came to the United States from Poland (Galicia) in 1910. Per the Ellis Island website, he boarded the ship Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse in Bremen, Germany (formerly Prussia). He had just completed his service in the Austrian Army. Poland at that time was divided into three spheres of influence by Austria, Prussia and Russia. Upon being discharged he returned to his father's farm. Officers from the Austrian Army attempted to reenlist him but tradition dictated he could remain at home so long as he was sorely needed on the farm.

Immediately after the officers departed, Albert's father gave him his brother's travel documents and instructed him to immigrate to the United States. His father knew that war was coming, and he didn't want to lose his son to it.

It took me longer to locate my grandfather on the passenger list because I had forgotten he was traveling under the name Jan and not Albert. Given the fact that Albert entered the United States under the name Jan Bialek and later burned his immigration papers it is evident he was, by definition, an "illegal immigrant." He went on to become a very hard-working brick mason and law-abiding citizen raising 12 children with the help of his Polish wife Mary (nee Mazan) and the rest, as they say, is history.

Just as Cleveland is a city of neighborhoods, so is the United States a country of immigrants. In fact, all the major cities of America, at one time, served as incubators for immigrants to not only become accustomed to the ways of this country but also to intermingle with each other--often prohibited in their native homeland.

It's a shame that the inner cities were handed over to the absentee landlords following World War II. Just imagine how much stronger and united our country might have been had this unofficial tradition continued. Gentrification is not the answer. Preventing immigration is not the solution. Intense vetting is acceptable during these challenging times, but to unfairly deny one person access to the United States makes us all orphans again. As a popular song goes: "let me in immigration man."

MetroHealth issues bonds for continuing campus transformation

On March 22, the MetroHealth Board of Trustees unanimously approved the issuance and sale of up to $1.3 billion in bonds to fund the health system's campus transformation. MetroHealth anticipates a 40-year final maturity to fund all associated costs of the campus transformation.

MetroHealth self-issued the bonds. Bank of America Merrill Lynch and J.P. Morgan Securities are co-lead underwriters for the sale of the bonds. Kaufman, Hall and Associates has acted as financial advisors for the campus transformation since 2015.

MetroHealth's campus transformation will include significant construction projects on its 52-acre main campus. Plans call for a new 12-story hospital building, a 1200-1500 car parking garage, and a central utility plant. Buildings will be demolished to make way for green space and internal roads, with additional plans to revitalize the W. 25th Street corridor.

The first phase of the campus transformation started in 2015 with the demolition of the Northcoast Behavioral Health Care Facility and the construction of the $82 million, two-story addition to the existing Critical Care Pavilion, which opened in July 2016.

NOBLE urges citizens to contact legislators about concerns in upcoming two year state budget

Northern Ohioans for Budget Legislation Equality (NOBLE), a community based coalition working to make the community's voice heard in the State of Ohio's legislative process, is currently mobilizing residents to lobby the State Legislature concerning the next two-year state budget. On March 29th, local members of NOBLE boarded a bus from Merrick House in the Tremont neighborhood for a trip to Columbus, Ohio to lobby the state legislature. In a Platform summary, NOBLE lists items that it would like addressed in the budget, which they hope will fund many programs in the State of Ohio from July 1, 2017 to June 30, 2019.

Topics addressed in the NOBLE Platform include: education, revenue sources, housing, health and human services; child care; kinship care; elder care; care for people with disabilities; health care and Medicaid; cash assistance; food assistance; transportation; and restoring the local government fund to 2010 levels.

For those that want to help, NOBLE suggests emailing a letter or calling certain members of the State Legislature to address issues that NOBLE believes should be addressed in the budget. Here are some of the issues NOBLE suggests acting on by sending a letter to your State Representative or State Senator, as well as a person in the leadership of the Ohio Legislature.

NOBLE suggests writing a letter or calling State Representative Ryan Smith, Chair of the House Finance Committee, to ask him to increase the Child Care Subsidy from 130% to 200% of the Federal Poverty Guideline. This would make it possible for more parents to send their children to quality day care centers while they are working. NOBLE also suggests Representative Ryan Smith as the contact to ask about restoring the local government fund to the 2010-11 levels. Since the local government fund was cut by the State of Ohio, municipalities, townships and counties have had to make serious cuts, impacting the quality of life, health and safety of Ohio's citizens, says NOBLE. Rep. Ryan Smith can be contacted at: rep93@ohiohouse.gov or by phone at: 614-466-1366.

Chair of the Health and Human Services Sub-Committee, Representative Mark Romanchuk is the contact person for several issues that NOBLE hopes will be addressed in the state budget. They urge citizens to ask him to increase funding for Adult Protective Services to $10 million for each year in the two-year budget to help counties

The Cleveland Foundation gave $75,000 to support Malachi House's capital improvements program. The grant money from The Cleveland Foundation will be used to upgrade the kitchen at as well as the generator.

The Edward A. and Catherine L. Lozick Foundation gave $45,000 that will be used for renovations of the laundry room and basement.

The Elisabeth Severance Prentiss Foundation awarded a $25,000 grant for resident furnishings.

KeyBank Tiedmann C.A.R.E.S. matched their employee contributions of $7,000 and donated $14,000.

Malachi House was founded in 1987 through a pioneering effort to preserve human dignity for terminally ill individuals. The inspiration for the house came from the ministry of Father Paul Hritz and the St. Malachi Church parishioners who often encountered homeless individuals dying under bridges, in cars, deserted buildings and other unsuitable places within the city.

Father Paul Hritz and co-founder, Catherine "Kaki" O'Neill, both envisioned the creation of a home-like setting where compassionate people would provide care and attention to those who would otherwise spend their final days alone.

WEST SIDE MARKET TENANTS

"It all started with Joe Cimperman (former Ward 3 Councilman) and his gang of white collar bullies," said Bertonaschi. He said in planning for the centennial of the West Side Market, they decided Ohio City Inc (OCI) should oversee marketing the West Side Market. They told us, "The market will do better if we'd listen to them."

Bertonaschi said the centennial report referred to markets in other cities that charged for parking and had longer hours. "The problem," said Bertonaschi, "is the other markets were more tourist attractions, not real working markets." Bertonaschi said as President of the West Side Market Tenants Association, he refused to go along with the plan for paid parking, insisting that grocery shoppers needed free parking close to the market. In rejecting the plan, he said he told Cimperman, "You are gambling with peoples' livelihoods."

Bertonaschi said Cimperman told him if he didn't go along with the plan, the city would take the parking lot from the West Side Market Tenants' Association. Bertonaschi said Cimperman told him that he didn't care what he thought because he didn't live in Cimperman's ward.

Bertonaschi, who lives in the West Park neighborhood, said he went to his own Councilman Martin Keane for help in keeping the parking lot under control of the West Side Market merchants, but Keane was of no help. Bertonaschi said only Councilman Michael Polensek, a West Side Market shopper, voted against the proposal by the City of Cleveland not to renew the West Side Market's lease on their parking lot.

Bertonaschi noted that the West Side Market merchants had a long-standing gentleman's agreement with the city of Cleveland over the parking lot. The merchants had maintained and operated the lot for years and in the past had even used their own money to purchase parcels that became part of the parking lot. This history did not seem to matter to the city and they took over the parking lot.

Fay Harris, an Ohio City resident involved in neighborhood discussions concerning the West Side Market, said that Neighborhood Progress Inc. told OCI to use the West Side Market as an engine to attract businesses to fill vacant storefronts in the neighborhood. Harris also said Councilman Cimperman promised OCI the West Side Market parking lot would generate $250,000 per year that could be used for maintenance and salaries.

Requests by the West Side Market merchants to have between 1 1/2 and two hours of free parking for their shoppers would reduce the revenue stream the organization

Improvements planned at five older Cleveland school buildings

CMSD NEWS BUREAU: The Cleveland Metropolitan School District will begin more than $23 million in improvements this year at five older school buildings, funding the projects with money from a bond issue approved by voters.

Improvements are in store for William Cullen Bryant School (3121 Oak Park) and Benjamin Franklin School (1905 Spring Road) in the Old Brooklyn neighborhood; the Louis Agassiz School (3595 Bowsworth) and Wilbur Wright School (11005 Parkhurst Drive) in the Westown area; as well as the downtown Lakeside Building, home to the Cleveland High School for Digital Arts and the new Davis Aerospace and Maritime High School.

The work, designed to "refresh" and repair the buildings or provide space for new programs, includes hoped to generate, said Harris.

This plan seems to have backfired as Mayor Frank Jackson's Chief of Staff Ken Silliman told area residents at a public meeting that the money from parking fees at the West Side Market would have to be used to pay off bonds on downtown parking garages. Only fees from the Hicks lot could be used toward maintenance needs at the West Side market. It is unclear from City of Cleveland documents if this is true. Audits of financial statements from the City of Cleveland Department of Public Works Division of Parking Facilities, secured by Fay Harris, indicate that the revenue from the West Side Market lot is not necessary to pay off the bonds. The City of Cleveland is currently meeting its payments on the bonds without revenue from the West Side Market parking lot. From reviewing city documents, it looks as though the parking revenue from the lot is simply backup security for the bonds, and the revenue is not needed for payments on the bonds.

Once the City of Cleveland had control of the parking lot, they began to redesign the lot along with the nearby Hicks lot in a plan to add 125 more parking spaces. The construction on the lot disrupted parking behind the West Side Market for 10 months. Bertonaschi said he petitioned the City of Cleveland to reduce rents for market tenants by 25% for three years to help them financially as they tried to regain customers who went to shop elsewhere when they could not find parking spots during the construction.

The problem of a shortage of parking places predates the work on the lot, large restaurants, bars and other new venues in the neighborhood were already encroaching on the parking traditionally reserved for West Side Market shoppers. At a meeting at Great Lakes Brewery, in a discussion of where the outside market merchants were going to park, Mayor's Chief of Staff Ken Silliman suggested they could park at a lot on W. 25th and Detroit and take a shuttle bus to the West Side Market. As President of the West Side Market Tenants Association, Bertonaschi rejected the idea of merchants standing on a corner at 4 or 5 a.m. waiting for a shuttle bus with their change money for the day as out of hand.

Speaking of area merchants in the surrounding neighborhood, Bertonaschi says, "They moved in and didn't have to pay anything for parking." He said they stole the West Side Market Parking lot that the market merchants had cared for since the 1960s. Bertonaschi believes the large businesses in the neighborhood should have joined together to build a parking garage or find their own solution to their parking needs rather than commandeering

30 years at the West Side Market.

Bertonaschi explained he takes pride in having fresh meat for customers that shopped for beef at Vince's Meats. He would get sides of beef delivered on Mondays and spend Monday and Tuesday down in the cooler breaking and cutting up meat. He would sell the fresh meat on Wednesday, Friday and Saturday. Selling the last of the meat on Saturday. Vince said this process, along with setting-up and closing-down the stand on days it was open, consumed about 60 hours per week. He said the loss of customers in recent years due to lack of parking, has resulted in him putting in his own money from his Social Security check to help keep the stand open.

Bertonaschi said some larger merchants own multiple stands at the West Side Market and can afford to hire help. Also, those that simply hire people to sell wholesale goods, might be able to afford to open on Sundays. He could not afford to do so without compromising the quality of his product. He said, opening another day would simply increase the cost of selling the same amount of meat. Bertonaschi predicted the new rules at the West Side Market would result in some of the smaller merchants that run their own stands, being forced to leave or hire help.

The audience is encouraged to explore and interact with items in the display which may be indicative that a teenager is involved in substance abuse, Bertonaschi said the West Side Market would lose its personal touch. Merchants like him would no longer be able to spend hours in the cooler breaking, cutting and preparing meat for sale. Instead they would be tempted to purchase pre-cut or prepackaged food for sale and then the products available at the West Side Market would be no different from the average grocery store. The West Side Market would lose the vibrancy of having merchant stand owners selling products they themselves had a hand in creating or preparing for sale.

With threats from the City of Cleveland to take away leases of market tenants who didn't open on a Sunday or Monday, and a threatening letter to merchants forbidding them to talk to the media, Bertonaschi said, "If you are an animal in a kennel, you have more rights than a tenant at the West Side Market."

Bertonaschi blames former Councilman Joe Cimperman, former Ohio City Incorporated Executive Director Eric Wobser, Mayor's Chief of Staff Ken Silliman and Mayor Frank Jackson (because it happened on his watch) for creating "something that they might not be able to fix." Bertonaschi said the solution would be not to have caused the problem in the first place.

Residents offer suggestions for community policing

by Chuck Hoven

A Community Forum was held at Urban Community School on March 22nd, to discuss forming a Community Policing Plan in response to the Consent Decree between the City of Cleveland and the United States Justice Department. Members of the Monitoring Team stressed to residents and stakeholders the importance of recruitment, training and staffing in creating a community policing force. They talked about finding ways to recruit people that are "open-minded, good at communication, have cultural competency and are open to new experiences." They also asked the audience to look at ways to make the police force more diverse and representative of the community.

To that end, after the crowd of about 100 people was divided into groups for discussion, many proposals were presented as residents interacted with police officers and members of the monitoring team to come up with ideas.

Several ideas involved changing the system of credits given on the civil service test for becoming Police Officer in Cleveland. Currently, the City Charter allows ten credits to be given to an applicant for just one year as a resident of the City of Cleveland. Residents felt that one year was too short a time to allow for so many credits. They suggested giving applicants one credit for each year, up to ten years, for living in Cleveland. In that way, the Cleveland Police Department would be assured of getting more long-term, Cleveland residents with more to offer in terms of existing relationships with Cleveland residents, community organizations and institutions.

In addition, residents suggested that the five additional points for military service should be scrapped. They said the extra points for military service tilts the personnel in the police force and leads to the militarization of the force. Instead, residents suggested five credits be given to candidates who have completed an Associate Degree or College Degree in a related field (Criminal Justice or one of the Social Sciences) at a Cleveland Based College—i.e. Cuyahoga Community College, Cleveland State University or Case Western University. Again, the expectation would be that the graduates would have developed relationships with Clevelanders, organizations and institutions in Cleveland that would be of value in helping with Community Policing.

As a recruiting tool, it was also suggested that the City of Cleveland advertise the fact that it will pay for college courses as continuing education credits. Thus, letting people know that becoming a police officer could be a way to pay for a college education.

It was suggested that recruiting police officers start in elementary and middle school, and officers be hired for their character and have an opportunity to gain skills through the Police Academy and continuing education. One idea was to offer Cleveland students scholarships and aid in studying for the police test.

Another suggestion to help officers and community members in handling nuisance complaints in the neighborhoods, was to have a more robust system than the Mayor's Action Line. One suggestion for a system, was to assign a tracking number to every complaint. By following the tracking number online, residents and police officers would be able to follow complaints until they are resolved.

In addressing the community problem of vacant and abandoned houses, residents suggested police officers work with students from Max Hayes construction program to help rehab houses. Officers could help with the work and provide security. The high school students could gain needed skills and the finished house could be turned over to a family in need either through Habitat for Humanity or the Catholic Charities Migration and Refugee Services. This would be a way not only to involve officers with young people in the community, but to also benefit a family in need of affordable housing and remove a potentially dangerous eyesore from a neighborhood.

There was some discussion about including bike patrols, foot patrols and mini-stations in a community policing effort. While residents spoke of the value of foot and bicycle patrols, the consensus was that the mini stations would be more feasible financially, and offer a base for interaction between residents and officers.

Another suggestion was for officers, after answering a call, to solicit feedback from residents by giving them a satisfaction survey about the officer's performance on the scene. Additionally, it was recommended that police officers carry business cards including the dates and locations of the Police Community Relations Committee meetings at their police district.

It was suggested that Cleveland Community Police Commission meetings, which solicit citizen ideas concerning the consent decree, be streamed live on Facebook and left up for a week so residents can review the meetings and share ideas.

Other suggestions included building back up the Auxiliary Police force, and increasing ride-along opportunities and other interactions between residents and police.

active citizens, say "Mr. Grossman", or Mr. Smith, but merely as a more passive "Bruce" or Joe or Jane. One's child ego-state was invoked, not one's adult ego-state. This was especially brought home because the site of the "ceremony" was, after all, an elementary school, and that in the introductory remarks we were told that this was a "teachable moment".

So, the questions should be asked, was this public meeting truly a town hall gathering of the community, who is invited, how they are invited, who controls the meeting, who sets the agenda of what are proper points of discussion, is the setting of the meeting consistent with its gravity, and how are the participants addressed--- or was the public meeting merely ceremonial?
