CLASH begins to collect signatures for ballot initiative to make rental housing lead safe

Cleveland Lead Safe Advocates for Safe Housing (CLASH) announced they are prepared to gather signatures to place a proposed Lead Safe Housing initiative on the November ballot. The announcement came as part of a February 4th Press Conference held by CLASH member organizations at the office of Organize! Ohio.

The group released a copy of the proposed ordinance which they said they hope Cleveland City Council will pass immediately. However, the group is starting to collect the 5,000 valid signatures it needs to place the initiative on the ballot, just in case Cleveland City Council does not take action. The ordinance is a modified version of legislation former Cleveland City Council Representative Jeff Johnson introduced in 2017, which never received a full committee hearing. Johnson, a member of CLASH said,

"The time to act is now. We cannot continue to wait. There is no need for more commissions and conferences to do what we already know needs to be done. The children of Cleveland need us all to work together and take the action necessary to make their homes safe from lead. It is time to end this crisis."

According to CLASH, they hope the City of Cleveland will pass legislation that will "1). Implement a legislative requirement that all rental properties are tested for lead hazards and be 'lead safe', 2) Identify and secure significant funding via a partnership with the private sector to assist landlords to make their properties safe from lead, and 3) Ensure tenant protections are provided."

Steve Holecko of the Cuyahoga County Progressive Caucus, a CLASH member group, said the hope is that Cleveland City Council will look at this legislation and pass it as soon as possible. However, if this does not occur, Holecko said he is confident that citizens will speak again by signing their names to get the issue on the ballot and voting in favor of it in November.

Jeff Mixon of Black Lives Matter of Cuyahoga County, another CLASH member group, said the legislation offers hope that will save lives. He said that places that have reduced lead poisoning demonstrate a drop in the murder rate.

Larry Bresler of Organize! Ohio, a CLASH member, said "the clear way to address lead poisoning is to prevent it in the first place."

Attorney Rebecca Maurer, who helped to update the bill's language said the proposed ordinance integrates the "mandatory lead safe standard into the City's rental registry program and the Healthy Homes initiative."

CLASH member groups expressed confidence that they can easily get over 10,000 signatures to assure the placement of the ordinance on the November ballot. Member groups include: Cleveland Lead Safe Network, Single Payer Access Network, Cuyahoga Progressive Caucus, Black Lives Matter of Cuyahoga County, Cleveland End Poverty Now Coalition, Organize!Ohio, and the Cleveland Democratic Socialists of America.

CLASH announced that signatures are being collected at the West Side Market. Jeff Mixon of Black Lives Matter, said he would be collecting signatures for CLASH on Saturday, March 2nd at the Carnegie Branch Library, 1900 Fulton, from 1-4 p.m.

Consultants offer strategies for attracting retail businesses to Ohio City by Bruce Checefsky

Artisan cheese and smoked meats from local boutique shops greeted a handful of Ohio City residents as they gathered at St. John Episcopal Church on February 12th to hear ESI Econsult Solutions, Inc. unveil strategies for attracting potential retail businesses to the neighborhood.

NEWS ANALYSIS

Catherine Timko, founding principal of The Riddle Company, a Washington DC based economic development marketing firm, as well as a senior advisor at Econsult Solutions; and Peter Angelides, principal of Econsult Solutions, Inc. (ESI), senior economic advisor and corporate director of ESI ThoughtLab, and a member of the teaching faculty at the University of Pennsylvania; led the conversation.

Ashley Shaw, Director of Neighborhood Planning and Development for Ohio City Inc., introduced Timko and Angelides telling the small crowd that the Ohio City Retail Plan process had begun back in August 2018. Surveys were collected asking residents where they currently shop, to find out why they're leaving the neighborhood to shop elsewhere, and help identify barriers and challenges they experience with existing businesses.

"We found out the grocery stores are not servicing everyone in the neighborhood, so there's some barriers there," Shaw said. "We've gone to the block clubs several times for conversations with residents. We talked with the youth and listened to what they want in terms of new businesses, along with a couple of hours in the public housing talking to residents."

Econsult Solutions, Inc. (ESI) collected retail market and demographic data to understand what the neighborhood can support in terms of new business, according to Shaw. Once a final report from the consulting firm is submitted, Ohio City Inc. will meet with their development committee and Ohio City Merchants Association to develop a work plan that addresses barriers to bringing in new businesses that support the neighborhood.

"We want to work with existing landlords and brokers to make sure they understand the types of businesses you want by giving them tools like the numbers and data to recruit those types of businesses," Shaw added.

Timko explained that the information compiled by ESI was technical and deliberate data, intended as a plan for the neighborhood, and targeted specifically to the retail industry. Census, demographic and market data, along with neighborhood and development data – what new building projects were going up, how big they are, how many square feet and rent structure, and general trends in housing and employment – was at the center of their analysis.

Angelides added that economic data, metric modeling information for this study was compiled from between 2010-2018, with a projection to 2023. Ohio City was carefully examined to determine a primary trade area. “Whenever you bring retail into an area, you have to identify a primary trade area,” he said. “This defines the walkability and density of Ohio City.”

For the purpose of the ESI study, the primary trade area is a twenty-minute walk from the corner of Lorain Avenue and West 25th Street in either directions. The secondary and tertiary trade area is more of a regional market, a destination like the West Side Market. Over 131,000 residents live within a 20-minute drive to the neighborhood, making Ohio City an appealing market to retail tenants.

Community engagement, block club meetings, and questionnaires added significantly to the data. Listening to people that live and work in different parts of the neighborhood was integral to their research process.

“We asked residents, ‘What do you like about Ohio City?’,” said Angelides. “We were interested to know what people would like to see more of, especially over the next five years.”

Many of the groups surveyed were very diverse, according to Timko, including seniors. “We wanted to include the entire group in our analysis,” she said.

A survey was sent to residents with about 500 responses primarily from Ohio City, but some were from outside the neighborhood. Food topped the list of goods and services people associated with Ohio City, with sporting goods, art galleries, drug stores, and entertainment ranked near the bottom. A list of goods and services that people would like to see more of include food, coffee shops and cafes, casual eating options, grocery stores, and women’s apparel.

Retail companies looking to move into the neighborhood need to know if they can survive. The primary trade zone metrics have to match the company metrics in order to make a decision to locate in Ohio City. Profit ultimately drives their decision.

“A retailer might need 10,000 residents in order to open a store,” said Timko. “We break out the metrics and looked at the data purely from a tenant in the market point of view.”

The diversity of the market, authenticity and eclecticism in the neighborhood, is a major plus for attracting retail stores to the area. But, according to the consultants, the prevailing older commercial building stock doesn’t work. Also, they said, the growing population of residents over the age of 65 is not attractive to retailers.

Timko pointed out that existing commercial buildings along Lorain Avenue and Detroit Avenue, “...are not big enough, don’t have the right footprint or proper ventilation. There might be insufficient storage or limited access from the front or rear doors. But new commercial developments offer an opportunity for the kinds of tenants that the community wants to bring in.”

A few blocks of retail stores followed by a high school then another couple blocks of retail stores interrupts the flow of retail shopping, ESI suggested. Active use of public space next to quiet use, then back to active use is seen as a negative in the retail market. Additionally, Ohio City is perceived as unsafe, a place where people party and drink excessively. That has to change in order for retailers to invest in the neighborhood.

Timko suggested that it’s up to the neighborhood to change public perception by engaging in an aggressive public campaign to realign the image with reality.

“I was blown away by how much change and new investment were coming into the market place,” she said. “But you have to make the media understand what’s here.”

General merchandise retail is key to a successful neighborhood. Convenience and services are needed in a walkable neighborhood. The dry cleaner, shoe repair, hardware and gardening store – small independent retailers that can survive add value to the proposition. Casual dining, late night or early morning for breakfast, these are the kinds of things people want. Ethnic and family style dining were listed as highly desirable.

ESI is compiling data is to give to Ohio City, Inc., as essential tools needed to attract new retail tenants. As Timko made clear, she knows exactly how much money is spent locally on food, what Ohio City residents are eating, average household income, and age demographics.

When a final report is complete, recommendations will include expanding marketing beyond special events, pursuing editorial coverage not just locally but in national newspapers and maga-

Sheriff’s deputies commended for saving son’s life

To the Editor:

LETTER

I am writing in regards to the Sheriff’s deputies, who saved my son’s life, Brian N. He overdosed in the basement of my home. The deputies recognized this, and they transported my son to the hospital before going to county jail. I feel with all the negative publicity; this should be known.

Deputy Sargent Sheehy was in charge that day. Deputies Miller, Hynes, Decredico, and Slowich should be commended.

This is the kind of dedication that should be recognized! Thank you for a job well done.

zines, developing a retail improvement plan, and continuing data collection and metrics that will resonate with a tenant. The most difficult recommendation from a political point of view was addressing the West Side Market.

"We know that the West Side Market is having management problems. We know they've lost some tenants and we understand why. We've talked to everyone on both sides. The market management has to change," Timko said, in a hush voice. "It needs to be professionally managed, better managed, outside of City Hall."

But like most consulting projects that produce vast amounts of metrics, the information has to be taken in context. Simple market diagnoses rarely accomplish what the client wants, critics of metrics as performance analysis argue. Over reliance on diagnostic tools can be a waste time and do unanticipated harm, according to social psychologist Professor Edgar Schein, author of the highly influential Organizational Culture and Leadership. The most important work by a consultant is to help the client understand the messiness of the problem.

"As someone over 65 years old, I'm wondering why your study lists people of my age as a weakness for retailers when some of us now retired have the time to go out for breakfast and do things we did not have to do when we were working?" asked Anita Myerson, a resident of Ohio City since the 1970's.

"A younger demographic offers a long-term, lifetime customer base for a retail tenant," Timko explained. "An older demographic does not."
